

FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE

15 April 2009

Singapore at 53rd Venice Biennale

7 June – 22 November 2009
(Vernissage: 4 - 6 June 2009)

Venue: Palazzo Michiel del Brusa, Cannaregio

Internationally recognised visual artist Ming Wong will represent Singapore at the 53rd Venice Biennale International Art Exhibition this year.

A graduate of the Slade School of Art (UK) and the Nanyang Academy of Fine Arts (Singapore), Wong is presently based in Berlin, Germany, where he undertook a one year artist residency at the prestigious Kunstlerhaus Bethanien in 2008. Wong has made significant in-roads internationally with his participation in numerous group and solo visual arts exhibitions in Europe, North America and Asia; notable recent showcases include the Images Festival in Toronto Canada, Vain Efforts in Sydney Australia, S1 Salon in UK and the Jakarta Biennale. Wong's works are currently on display at the At Home Abroad showcase at 8Q SAM, for Singapore artists who are well received overseas.

This will be Singapore's 5th consecutive presentation at the Venice Biennale. The Commissioner for the Singapore Pavilion is Lim Chwee Seng, Director of Visual Arts & Resource Development, National Arts Council (NAC), while Tang Fu Kuen, an authority in managing multi-disciplinary arts showcases, serves as curator.

Said Lim Chwee Seng, "The Venice Biennale is a global cultural platform that provides high visibility and connectivity for participating artists and curators from around the world. Together with the Singapore Biennale and the Singapore Art Show organised by NAC in Singapore, our participation in the Venice Biennale forms part of our all-rounded approach to the development of Singapore's traditional and contemporary art practices. This year the international art community will have the opportunity to witness the talents of Singapore artist Ming Wong and curator Tang Fu Kuen at the Pavilion through a multi-disciplinary, multi-lingual work that embodies a strong Singaporean character."

Being featured as a solo artist in the Singapore Pavilion this year is an acknowledgement of Wong's highly internationalised status, and recognition of his potential. As the most established and prestigious contemporary arts event, the Venice Biennale is an excellent springboard for Singapore artists to the global visual arts stage. Singapore's participation in what is commonly referred to as the Olympics of the art world, provides the best opportunity not only to showcase our promising arts talents, but also to gain mindshare internationally and broaden Singapore's global art footprint.

The Singapore Pavilion, entitled Life of Imitation, stages the co-existence of multiple worlds where language, gender, appearance and traditions constantly negotiate with one another. In playful and imperfect acts of mimesis and melodrama, this exhibition attempts to hold the mirror up to the Singaporean condition related to roots, hybridity and change.

Wong explores the performative veneers of language and identity through his own “world cinema” - a series of video installations based on well-known works and artistes in Asian cinema. The mood is further enhanced by billboards painted by Wong and Singapore’s last surviving billboard painter Neo Chon Teck, and movie memorabilia such as photographs of old cinemas in Singapore, paintings, drawings and transcripts, depicting the creation process of Wong’s video installations and the entire exhibition itself.

Wong joins 12 other artists who have represented Singapore at the oldest and most prestigious international contemporary art platform over the last 10 years. They were Matthew Ngui, Suzann Victor, Salleh Japar and Henri Chen (2001); Francis Ng, Heman Chong and Tan Swie Hian (2003); Lim Tzay Chuen (2005); Zul Mahmud, Jason Lim, Vincent Leow and Tang Da Wu (2007). The curators were Joanna Lee and Ahmad Mashadi (2001); Low Sze Wee (2003); Eugene Tan (2005); and Lindy Poh (2007).

The 53rd Venice Biennale International Art Exhibition charts the highest number of participating countries at a record 77 country pavilions with a significant increase in number of single-artist representation.

We invite you to publicise the participation of Singapore at the Venice Biennale 2009.

SINGAPORE AT 53RD VENICE BIENNALE INTERNATIONAL ART EXHIBITION

CURATORIAL THEME

LIFE OF IMITATION

Cinema and performativity form the core of the Singapore pavilion at the 53rd Venice Biennale. We re-imagine the golden era of the multi-ethnic film industry in Singapore before Independence in 1965, so as to re-read 'national cinema' constructed through language and identity.

Hitherto little known, the 1950s and 60s screen history in Singapore records some of most charming cinema architecture, prolific film production studios in Asia, award-winning movies, and vibrant socio-cultural milieu. This phenomenon arose amidst rapid modernity, de-colonisation and nation-building struggle. Multiple worlds co-existed where language, gender, appearance and traditions were continually negotiated. Cinema was the site par excellence that captured the complex relations and knowledge production of this historical period of change and fluidity.

Inspired by this rich heritage, artist Ming Wong illuminates on Singapore's significant cinematic legacy, while inserting a set of performative video interventions that reflexively address identity formation. His aesthetic strategy is to re-enact the characters and lines in specific scenes or situations that relate to otherness. The mimicry is sly and comic, and the video loops soon expose slippages in acting guises and stances. These imperfections of copying allow for a critical recognition of difference and ambiguity.

For his performative operations, Ming Wong has chosen to re-present films that are related to or set in the 50s and 60s, and are familiar to audiences spanning 2 generations. These films engage with notions of non-authenticity and parroting. The first is a compendium of works by P. Ramlee, the wunderkind of Malay cinema whose stereotypical characters and memorable lines have endured popular taste. The second is the Hollywood melodrama 'Imitation of Life' (1959) by Douglas Sirk about a black mother and a 'white' daughter. The third is Wong Kar Wai's 'In the Mood for Love' (2000) with actress Maggie Cheung rehearsing for a confrontation with her spouse about his infidelity.

As part of commemorating yesteryear cinema, the country's last surviving billboard painter, CT Neo, has been commissioned to collaborate with Ming Wong to create 3 canvases to be unveiled in Venice. Also seen for the first time outside Singapore are the rare artefacts by private collector HM Wong who has lovingly reconstructed - in the form of A4 paper 'artworks' - the evolution of local cinema buildings in the last century. This complements Ming Wong's journey from Singapore to Malaysia photographing the fate of once beautiful but now deserted 'architectures of entertainment'. In parallel, film-maker Sherman Ong's 'creative documentary' brings us encounters with fabulous individuals whose deeds and aspirations constitute Singapore's collective film memory.

Mediating the way the past and present histories intersect, the pavilion unfolds a voyage of truth where both archival and re-invented materials, real and fictional processes, contest one another. The tones and moods in each room shift: from nostalgia to actual to playful. Beyond the local cinematic frame, the historical Singaporean condition related to roots, hybridity and cosmopolitanism resonates within a contemporary global context.

ARTIST

Ming WONG (b. 1971, Singapore)

Based in Singapore and Berlin, Ming Wong is an internationally emerging visual artist who exhibits significant potential to become a major global art talent. An active practitioner and well profiled in Europe, Wong was awarded the Wollita Kulturpreis 2008, and was also on an artist residency programme at the prestigious Künstlerhaus Bethanien in Berlin, where he presented a solo exhibition Angst Essen – Eat Fear.

Armed with a Masters in Fine Arts from Slade School of Art (UK), and a Diploma in Fine Arts from Nanyang Academy of Fine Arts (Singapore), Wong has participated in numerous group and solo visual art exhibitions in Singapore, Indonesia, North America and Europe. His works have been showcased notably at the Images Festival in Toronto, the Jakarta Biennale, Vain Efforts in Sydney, S1 Salon in UK and At Home Abroad in Singapore this year, as well as the Art Forum Berlin 2008 in Germany. Wong has exhibited twice at mononoaware.

A recipient of the London Artists Film & Video Award from Film London, Wong explores the performative veneers of language and identity through his own 'world cinema' in the Singapore Pavilion this year.
